THE TOWN THAT CAME TO THE TRACKS

By Mrs. George Tovey

In 1833, after Indiana had been a state for 17 years, the first white men explored the possibilities of settling in Lake County. At that time, much of the land was swamp. A few hardy settlers like Jack Cady found high spots to build on, but most of the Griffith area was marsh and travel between Highland and Merrillville was by boat. The swamp was reclaimed largely through the efforts of a man named Hart who built ditches throughout the area to drain the water.

While the swamp land was being reclaimed, railroads were being built across this section of the county. Five of them happened to cross in one spot and this crossing soon became the reason for a town. In 1884, Peter Young, a railroader, bought an acre of land just south of where Margaret's Restaurant is now. Within two years, John Miller had built a tavern just to the north of him and Jake Miller a clothing store just to the south. Some of the needs of the local railroaders and farmers were temporarily met.

Then in 1891 things began to happen. In anticipation that the Chicago World's Fair would bring a tremendous spurt to the growth of Chicago and the outlying districts, two promoters named Jay and Elmer Dwiggin bought up all the farms from Colfax Ave. to one half mile west of Broad Street and from the railroad tracks north to Elm St. They laid out a town in lots of 50' each to sell for an average of $300 a piece. Planning their advertising scheme carefully, they set out to sell these lots and build a town.

No one knows for sure why the Dwiggin chose to call the town Griffith. Some say it was named after their silent partner; others say they took the name from a contractor in charge of building one of the railroads. Whatever the reason, Griffith is better than Dwiggin Junction or Dwiggin Corners, as the town was called for awhile.

The Dwiggin brothers worked hard to sell the town. They sold lots sight unseen at the World's Fair, by mail, and also by bringing investors and other people out on the railroad on Sundays. One part of their original advertising reads: "TOWN OF GRIFFITH - CHICAGO'S BEST FACTORY SUBURB-buy where there is sure growth ahead!" They induced factories and businesses to move in and according to the early settler Peter Young, "buildings went up like mushrooms". Within a year the blocks directly north and south of the tracks on Junction Ave. (Broad St.) were all built up.

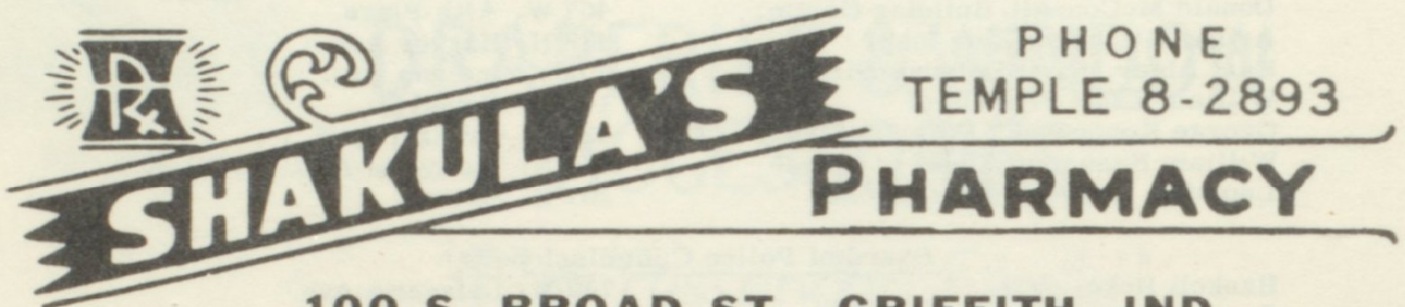

But the boom did not last and before two years had past the Dwiggin had left town, no doubt somewhat richer for their efforts. Soon most of the businesses and new people who had come into the town left also. In 1899 the Dwiggin brothers sent their power of attorney to a son who handled their affairs. They were then living in Buenos Aires, Argentina - a long way from their short lived real estate venture.

During the next ten years the original townspeople who were joined by some others had enough faith in the future to organize themselves and incorporate the town of Griffith in 1904. The population was then about 200. In 1911 the first portion of Franklin School was built. After this a number of more conservative real estate ventures were undertaken and Griffith began to grow at a slow but more healthy rate. As late as 1940, Spitz and Miller Insurance was the only building on the west side of the 100 block of North Broad St. Then the population of the town was about 4,000. Since 1940 the growth of the town has been fairly rapid, much like other suburban communities. Today the population is over 10,000 and Griffith is served by many fine churches, schools, health, governmental, and shopping facilities.

Griffith, Indiana

The town of Griffith dates back to about the year 1890. It originally was known as Dwiggins Corners, and is believed to have derived its present name from a civil engineer who laid out some of the railroad right-of-ways.

Griffith from the start was recognized as a strategic location for both residential as well as light industrial development as was shown by an industrial boom in the early 1900's. Its importance and desirability as a suburban residential community grew gradually - slowed thru the depression years and spurted ahead in the war years and those years following World War II.

POPULATION-Griffith's population in 1900 was about 200. In 1940 it was approximately 4000. Since 1940 Griffith 's growth has shown rapid strides, and in 1960 its population has increased by 150%, having reached a population of approximately 10,000.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS-In addition to its residential growth Griffith has grown also in all those facets which tend to enrich the moral fibre of any American community and is now possessed of some of the finest churches and schools in the Calumet area.

Griffith is blessed with having most of the major Christian religious denominations represented as well as most civic and service organizations.

Griffith for its size has an exceptionally fine school system. This includes three strategically located elementary public schools: Benjamin Franklin, Eldon Ready, and Elsie Wadsworth - the last two being new within the last couple of years. In addition Griffith has a large Catholic elementary school, St. Mary's. Griffith High School is modern, possessed of fine athletic facilities and also was erected within the past few years.

FACILITIES AND GOVERNMENT- The shopping facilities; fine medical and dental practitioners; two well equipped fire stations; modern metropolitan police force; honest, alert, progressive government; coupled with all its other advantages make Griffith truly unique.
